Abstract

defining technical specifications for quality requirements for the use of animal cells as the Committee on Biological Standardization in countries in novel continuous cell lines of increasing need for the re-evaluation of existing new issues in cell substrate safety arising from these demands, the WHO Study Group on Cell Substrates was formed in 2006 to initiate revision of WHO requirements and to address the need for further research in this area. At its second meeting on 11-12 June 2007, the Study Group reviewed scientific data that would form the basis for new recommendations and made a number of proposals for further investigations. The Study Group is working on the preparation of a revised WHO document, and a broad consultation with regulators, manufacturers, and other relevant parties is planned for 2008.

Abstract
Fixed-bed combustion in a tube reactor is a useful procedure to exploit a large variety of biomasses obtaining accurate in-bed data. In this paper, the ignition front propagation velocity is experimentally studied in a counter-current process for eight different biomass fuels with a

Disease relapse after haematopoietic stem cell transplantation: risk factors and treatment

F. Dazzi MD, PhD , Professor of Stem Cell Biology and Cell Transplantation

^aDepartment of Haematology, Imperial College at Hammersmith Hospital, London, UK

Available online 19 April 2007.

Disease relapse is the commonest cause of treatment failure after allogeneic stem cell transplantation. Although the highest remission rates are achieved in chronic myeloid leukaemia, relapse is also a major problem in lymphoproliferative disorders. However, the experience of DLI in lymphoproliferative diseases because of the heterogeneity of these diseases and the different conditioning regimens. We will review the role of DLI for different disease types in the context of conventional and high-dose intensity conditioning regimens. The factors influencing response and graft-versus-host disease as well as the optimal cell dose will be discussed. Finally, we will describe the main

Disease relapse after haematopoietic stem cell transplantation: Risk factors and treatment

F. Dazzi MD, PhD  , Professor of Stem Cell Biology and C. Fozza MD^a, Clinical Research Fellow

^aDepartment of Haematology, Imperial College at Hammersmith Hospital, Du Cane Road, London W12 0NN, UK

Available online 19 April 2007.

Disease relapse is the commonest cause of treatment failure after allogeneic haematopoietic stem-cell transplantation. Adoptive immunotherapy based on donor lymphocyte infusions (DLI) has a prominent role in the management of disease recurrence. Although the

This gene encodes a type II integral membrane protein that is 77% identical to CD209 antigen, a HIV gp120-binding protein. This protein, like CD209, efficiently binds both intercellular adhesion molecule 3 (ICAM3) and HIV-1 gp120, and enhances HIV-1 infection of T cells. This gene is mapped to 19p13.3, in a cluster with the CD209 and CD23/FCER2 genes. Multiple alternatively spliced transcript variants have been found for this gene, but the biological validity of some variants has not been determined

Title

• Global warming and sexual plant reproduction

Abstract

- The sexual reproductive phase in plants might be particularly vulnerable to the effects of global warming.
- Understanding phenotypic plasticity and gametophyte selection for prevailing temperatures, along with possible epigenetic changes during this process, could provide new insights into plant evolution under a global - warming scenario.

Article

- Although the reasons behind global warming are still controversial, its adverse consequences are clear and of increasing concern worldwide.
- Indeed, global warming has been shown to affect species ecology, ranging from effects on geographical distribution, phenology or species interaction to extinction risks (reviewed in Ref. [3]).
- Here, we discuss the effect of temperature change on the Expression and purification of unlabeled proteins, as well as of proteins uniformly labeled with stable isotopes for the NMR experiments, was carried out as previously described for eIF4A-CTD. NMR Resonance Assignments and Chemical Shift Perturbation Assay NMR spectra were recorded at 298 K on a Bruker 750, 600, or 500 MHz, or a Varian Inova 600 or 500 MHz spectrometers, equipped with cryogenic probes. Unless stated otherwise, samples for NMR measurements contained 0.4–1 mM protein in buffer containing 20 mM Tris-HCl (pH 7.0), 150 mM KCl ...

For time series experiments, yeast cells of an IRMA-containing strain (P340) were grown at 30°C in YEP containing 2% glucose (YEPD) or 2% galactose and 2% raffinose (YEPGR) until mid-log phase. Cells were then collected by filtration, washed twice with YEP, shifted respectively in YEPGR (for switch-on experiments) or YEPD (for switch-off experiments), and grown at 28°C. Cells were harvested at different time points for mRNA extraction. For steady-state perturbation experiments, centromeric plasmids were constructed as follows. CBF1, GAL4, SWI5 ...

A forward genetic screen of fast neutron mutagenized population of HSP70::LUC reporter strain was carried out to identify mutants perturbed in the ambient temperature perception pathway (seeds irradiated at HAS KFKI-Atomic Energy Research Institute, Hungary). Seven-day-old seedlings were incubated at 12°C for 48 hr before shifting to 27°C for 3 hr and screening for LUC.
